

The Royston Crow

7th December 2006

How gratifying it is to see Oliver Heald's opposition to the changes proposed to the Freedom of Information Act, and that he believes that individuals are entitled to information. What a shame he does not believe that his own constituents have the right to know his views on important matters.

I have asked him four times, in writing, why he does not support a referendum on our continued membership of the European Union.

He has refused to answer the question.

I find it to be of serious concern that not only is he clearly happy for over 60 per cent of the new laws in this country to come from an unelected, and unaccountable body (the European Commission), and that he does not believe that we, the electorate and taxpayers, should have the right to determine our own future.
