

LEAVE THE EU

The new Conservative plans to limit immigration risk introducing an unfair and economically harmful system. By refusing to challenge the EU's open-border policy, the proposals instead advocate arbitrary restrictions on non-EU migration, discriminating against the vast majority of the world's population simply because they are not EU members.

The Conservatives' proposals state quite rightly that Britain should aim to let in the most economically beneficial migrants. But instead of proposing a system that would do just that, they have fudged the issue for fear of criticising the EU. It is not just bad economics, it is ethically wrong to discriminate against 90% of the world's population just because they are not in the EU. For the tens of millions of loyal Commonwealth citizens, this is an insulting betrayal of their good faith.

The choice is clear: either we sever our historic links with nations around the globe and cut ourselves off from some of the most vibrant economies of the world, or we reassert British control of our own immigration policy. To do the right thing we have to leave the EU.

KEITH STANDRING (CIlr)
Sackville Ward